

The Best Plan for Canada

Governments around the world know they cannot sit idly by and let this economic crisis deepen. They are taking urgent action and investing billions of dollars on urgent economic stimulus measures.

Prime Minister Harper pledged to do the same when he met with world leaders in Washington last month. Yet, at the first opportunity to present Canadians with a plan to shelter us from the mess of the world economy, Stephen Harper played divisive, partisan political games.

Instead of immediate action to protect jobs, the Harper government attacked women's rights to pay equity. Instead of providing more support for unemployed workers, the Harper government brought in wage controls on federal government workers. Instead of real aid to the struggling manufacturing and forestry sectors, the Harper government pledged to cut government spending at a time when governments around the world are spending more to stimulate their economies.

This is not leadership.

Now is the time for a government to take immediate action to fix the economy.

The Best Plan for Canada

Now is the time for a government to take immediate action to fix the economy.

The Liberals and the NDP have a plan. They have pledged to defeat the Conservatives and form a coalition government.

The Liberal-NDP Accord would get Canada working again by providing immediate money for infrastructure projects, transit, clean energy, water, housing and retrofits.

The Liberal-NDP Accord would bring in strategies to save manufacturing and forestry jobs.

The Liberal-NDP Accord would end the two-week waiting period for EI benefits, protect pensions when employers go bankrupt, and reduce child poverty by improving child benefits.
