Have your say: What Kind Of Toronto Do You Want?

A People's Guide to the Toronto Service Review

City Hall has launched a public consultation process, called the Toronto Service Review. Let's send a strong signal to our City Councillors and the Mayor about the kind of Toronto we want to live in and pass on to our children.

Some will try to use the Toronto Service Review to cut the important programs and services that we all rely on – the things that make Toronto a great community to live in.

Much is at stake:

- Imagine having to pay more to use the TTC while bus routes are reduced.
- Imagine closing libraries and sending a signal to our children that, as a community, we don't value reading.
- Imagine fewer city recreational services, arts programs and environmental initiatives that help make Toronto green, vibrant and inclusive. Losing the things that keep us from feeling we're entirely on our own.

These threats are real. Public service delivery may be handed over to profit-seeking corporations. This kind of privatization will only result in residents paying higher user fees without being able to hold their City Council accountable for the diminishing quality of service.

Nothing less than the future of our city is at stake.

The Toronto Services review pits Torontonians against each other. The city deliberately cut back on its revenues to create a crisis. Now, they want Torontonians to fight each other over a shrinking pool of public services.

They won't tell you that cutting services and handing public delivery to profit-seeking corporations will result in residents paying higher user fees.

Cutting services, privatizing them and slapping new user fees on residents simply cannot balance the budget. They can, however, turn Toronto into a city in decline.

We can't let this happen. Here's what you can do:

1. Fill out the online or paper survey. Visit <http://www.toronto.ca/torontoservicereview/>

When filling out the survey, please consider the following principles:

- Every city service is necessary to someone. That's why it was created.
- With the political attack on public service workers, many of whom do the dirty jobs that keep Toronto clean and vibrant, it's easy to forget that the thousands of city employees who provide city services are your neighbours.
- When services are delivered by city workers, they are accountable to us. Services delivered by profit-seeking corporations eliminate public accountability (just ask any customer of Bell or Rogers).
- User fees create unfair barriers. User fees are the same for all residents regardless of income, so people with less get hit harder. User fees can also contribute to declining communities. When user fees were slapped onto recreation services and community use of schools a few years ago, fewer Torontonians could afford to participate, resulting in program cuts.

- Property taxes, not user fees, are the fairest way to contribute to the services we all need without causing undue hardship on those who can least afford it.

2. Go to a city-run community meeting and make your voice heard. To register for one of the remaining consultations, go to <http://tinyurl.com/servicesmeeting> or call 311.
3. Let your City Councillor know that you don't support service cuts. If you're not sure who your Councillor is, call 311 and they will connect you.

You can have a say about the kind of Toronto we want for today, and the kind of Toronto our children will inherit.

This guide comes from One Toronto. Made up of a wide range of community organizations, our vision is for a city that builds on its successes, cares for its neighbours, and does its part to protect the environment and values community.
