Workshop # 2 Youth-Led Democratic Innovation: Leading Change Beyond Voting

Young people are not engaging in democracy and politics the same way they did decades ago. However, their participation isn't dead - it's just different. YLDI is a framework developed by Apathy is Boring aiming to redefine the way we view civic participation, especially when it comes to young people. In this presentation, we walk through the shifting landscape of youth participation, and get to the heart of what matters to them, what they are looking for in order to be engaged, and why they aren't finding it in today's democratic institutions. This interactive presentation also captures how young Canadians engage with structures of power and government to drive change for issues they care about and monitor the actions of leaders who champion their cause.
